Governor speaks to editors in Columbia

Gov. Bob Holden addressed the May 2 lunch audience at the annual meeting of the Missouri Society of Newspaper Editors / Associated Press Managing Editors in the Quality Inn, Columbia. He talked about the waning legislative session and his disagreements with the Legislature's proposed budget, then answered several questions. Missouri's governors have spoken at the editors meeting almost every year since the founding of MSNE more than 10 years ago. More photos and stories about the MSNE / APME meeting begin on page 4.

We need more editorial writers

Part of newspapers' responsibility is to offer opinions

Are Missouri's community newspapers doing the kind of job we should be doing with our editorial pages? First, are we limiting our opinions to the editorial page, and then are we actually using that page to present well-founded opinions that provoke thought and positive action?

I know of some who are doing what I consider to be a great job in that venue, and I have personal knowledge of others among us who are perhaps shirking at least some of our responsibility. I've been a party to both in my own practice, so any challenge I extend here is done with at least one eye looking into a mirror.

Gary Rust is among those whom I consider to be "The Lions" in this business. He knows the business side of things inside and out and he understands all phases of the service side, too.

During our conversation at the Southeast Missouri Press Association meeting back in April, Gary shared with me his concern that too many of today's newspapers don't have editorials and too many of the editorials that are being published are not what they should be. So many writers, he says, are turning out editorials without doing the research necessary in order to reach and present sound conclusions.

Now, someone might be quick to conclude that any opinion with which Gary doesn't agree might be what he considers to be a poorly researched editorial. I'm sure that's not the case. He might agree with a premise but disagree with the practice, and vice versa.

And Gary is not one to point to a problem without also offering a solution. He directs us to one particular website: johncombest.com. It is a site maintained by John Combest of St. Louis. It is a collection of stories and editorials gleaned from newspapers throughout the state on a daily basis. Rust recommends that editors and reporters bookmark the site for frequent visits.

Visitors will see that it is a site intended for the purpose of keeping Missouri Republicans informed on the issues as recorded by Missouri newspapers, but being informed as a Republican or Democrat naturally involves knowing what all sides are saying. Therefore, the collection of news and editorials there will be beneficial for people of any political persuasion.

Another time-tested method is to participate in hard copy newspaper exchanges with those willing to oblige. Also, I'm sure other editors can be engaged in conversations at various press gatherings around the state and pumped for information about their favorite places to go in order to get on top of issues and stay there. Of course, that will require someone actually attending those functions.

Many thanks are due to the folks who have sent offers of help, encouragement and sympathy in connection with the tornado at Stockton.

As an update, we really came out of the entire experience very well. First, our staff survived and without injury, even though general manager Marilyn Ellis rode out the storm in our building.

Then we are fortunate that the building also stayed together well enough to protect all of our equipment. We were able to pull it out, get it all on line in Bolivar, and get busy publishing the newspaper without interruption.

It's a good example of the benefit of being part of a larger family of newspapers. However, those who are independent need not feel as if they are without options. I encourage any independent operator RIGHT NOW to contact neighboring publications and form alliances that go both ways in the event of such a disaster. □

Economies of scale cited as an economic benefit of proposal

Presidents see progress in merger

Capturing economies of scale and building on the strengths of each university are the goals of a proposed merger of the University of Missouri and Northwest Missouri State University.

So stated the schools' top officials.

Each school's president joined for a session with editors at the May 1-2 MSNE/APME meeting in Columbia. Former Gov. Roger Wilson introduced Dr. Elson Floyd, the UM President, and Dr. Dean Hubbard, the president of NWMS in Maryville.

Each president praised the quality of the other's university. Floyd pointed out NWMS's pioneering integration of technology into its campus; Hubbard noted the quality and diversity offered by the four-campus UM system.

In what may be a first, two independent universities have proposed merging without being forced or coerced by government or economic circumstances. Their proposal to the Legislature came too late for consideration this session.

Floyd and Hubbard said their goal is not to homogenize the university, but to use the strengths of each school to enhance the mission of the whole.

When they began discussing a merger, they decided early to open their proposal to public and legislative scrutiny rather than to work on details in private.

"We would rather deal with the problems associated with openness than the problems associated with being closed," Hubbard said.

They talked to the journalists about higher education in general and education in Missouri in particular.

Floyd said Missouri can't afford to pay for a child's education twice. Missourians pay once as a child advances through K-12. When some of those students enter college and must take remedial reading and writing courses, the state pays for those children's education a second time.

Missouri has a lower rate of participation in higher education than any state it borders, Hubbard said. Participation rate is the percentage of high school graduates who go on to college. That low rate hurts the state economically, he said.

"Returns on K-12 education only materialize when kids go on to college," Floyd said.

Studies show that for every $1 spent on higher education, the state gets $10 and the country gets $20, he said.

In the next five years, economic development will emerge as another mission of the University of Missouri, Floyd said.

Just after arriving several months ago, Floyd asked UM attorneys to settle a Sunshine Law suit filed against the Board of Curators by The Kansas City Star. A few weeks later the University agreed to release the audit records sought by The Star since 1998.

The University must be accountable, Floyd said. Opening records promotes that. □

Editors hear governor, presidents

MSNE / APME held annual meeting May 1-2 in Columbia

By CLIFF SCHIAPPA
The Associated Press

The annual convention of Missouri Associated Press Managing Editors and the Missouri Society of Newspaper Editors brought out newsmakers in the education field.

In a joint appearance at the meeting, University of Missouri President Dr. Elson S. Floyd and Northwest Missouri State University President Dr. Dean

Hubbard discussed the proposed merger of the two schools.

"We want to build on our strengths. We want to expand educational opportunities for our students and the citizens of our region and we want to contribute to economic development," said Hubbard.

Floyd and Hubbard were introduced to the group of editors by former Missouri Gov. Roger Wilson, who endorsed the merger talks by praising their open nature and "the sheer innovation behind it. ... This is history on the hoof, that's all there is to it," Wilson said.

Also on the agenda was Missouri Gov. Bob Holden who spoke at the awards luncheon. He discussed the state budget and the funding of what he considers vital services. He also took questions from meeting attendees.

A new session for the group was a panel of Missouri School of Journalism students who discussed their goals after graduation. This gave the professionals a chance to explain what they are looking for when hiring young journalists. It also was an opportunity for editors and students to make contact with potential hires and employers.

Missouri Press Association legal counsel Jean Maneke spoke about the impact of the new HIPAA regulations. The new rules have caused a lot of confusion in newsrooms and hospitals. It was suggested that newspapers should make a case with their readers that illustrates the news they will miss reading about when the HIPAA regulations are followed.

Missouri APME president Dennis Ellsworth of the St. Joseph News-Press was retained in that office after the board decided to make the president's position a two-year term. □

MSNE President Bud Jones, right, visits with Vernon Publishing Co. editors before the writing session by Rick Horowitz, far right. The women are Ginny Duffield of the Miller County Autogram-Sentinel in Tusculumbia, Bertha Evans of the Versailles Leader-Statesman and Becky Holloway of the Tipton Times.

Use 'word fonts' to beat boredom

Rick Horowitz gave Missouri editors some suggestions when they met in Columbia May 1-2.

First, though, the columnist and writing coach told them there are no rules for news writing.

"Do what it takes to tell the story well," he said, and, "You have more options than you think you do."

Among Horowitz's suggestions:

✓ Ask yourself what the story is about. We try to write too much at one time. Take control of your material and decide which is the right story today.

✓ Leave out the information that readers will skip. Decide what readers need to see or should see.

Lack of time, staff and space forces you to focus, to choose, to write better.

✓ Just because you talk to somebody doesn't mean you have to include that person or his comments in your story.

✓ Don't bore people.

✓ Find the correct voice for the story. Use alternate routes. You decide.

✓ Word fonts: Different words can be used with different stories. Different "word fonts" provide different tones, textures, flavors while describing the same scene or activity.

To illustrate what he means by word fonts, Horowitz had each person write a brief news story about a bunch of news writers in a room. In session handouts, each person had received a sealed envelope. Inside each envelope was a different word font to use for the story.

Some of the word fonts were "staccato," "nothing but questions," "Pentagon briefing," "recipe," "romance novel," "dear diary." A writer would use different words with a "Pentagon briefing" approach than he would with a "dear diary" approach.

By using different perspectives and sets of words — or word fonts — writers can tell the same story in any number of ways. □

Editors' officers

Officers of Associated Press Managing Editors in Missouri for the coming year are, from the left, President Dennis Ellsworth, St. Joseph News-Press; First Vice President Diane Raynes, Trenton Republican-Times; and Second Vice President Oliver Weist, Sedalia Democrat. APME met May 1-2 in Columbia for its annual meeting with the Missouri Society of Newspaper Editors.

A group of students from the Missouri School of Journalism visited for a session at the MSNE / APME meeting. They introduced themselves, talked about their studies and their ambitions and answered questions from the editors and publishers. The group included students from across the country and around the world and ranged in experience from not-yet-decided-on-journalism to almost-finished grad students.

Brisbane re-elected Press-Bar president

Arthur Brisbane, publisher of The Kansas City Star, was re-elected president of the Missouri Press-Bar Commission at its April 22 meeting.

Among those attending the meeting in the Reynolds Alumni Center at UMC were Missouri Press Association representatives William L. Miller, publisher of the Washington Missourian; and Dalton C. Wright, president of Lebanon Publishing Co., member-at-large Frank L. Martin III, publisher of the West Plains Daily Quill, non-voting member Doug Crews, executive director of Missouri Press Association, and Brisbane, representing The Kansas City Star.

Supreme Court Judge William Ray

Price also attended, representing the Judicial Conference of Missouri.

Sandra Davidson, a media law professor at the Missouri School of Journalism, moderated a panel discussion on Media Coverage of Trials in Missouri.

Panelists were Judge Frank Conley of Columbia, business reporter Dan Margolies of The Kansas City Star, Michael Jonathan Grinfield of the School of Journalism, and William H. Colby, an author and lawyer from Kansas City.

The Press-Bar Commission is an organization whose goal is to improve public understanding of the legal process and news coverage of it. Its projects involve things such as production of a News Reporters Handbook on the court system and educational material for distribution to newly elected officials and the public.

Other representatives on the Commission are from the Missouri Broadcasters Association, Missouri Bar, Trial Judges Section of the Judicial Conference of Missouri, Missouri Association of Probate and Associate Circuit Judges, Missouri Municipal Judges, Missouri Court of Appeals, St. Louis Post-Dispatch, St. Louis and Kansas City bar associations, selected members-at-large and several non-voting members associated with the media or the legal system. □

Newspapers do have a future

New Kansas City Star press will be 'awesome to behold'

By JERRY HEASTER

Columnist, The Kansas City Star

A pledge to KC and The Star

It may not be good form to toot your own horn. But it sure did this ink-stained wretch's heart good when my employer got the go-ahead from headquarters to build a $200 million production plant in Kansas City.

That the decision was made to locate the new printing operation across the street from the fortresslike home of The Star at 18th Street and Grand Boulevard was all the more gratifying. In one fell swoop it represented a massive commitment to the future of two institutions whose viability has been called into question with increasing frequency in recent years — newspapers and downtowns.

There are those, of course, who say the daily newspaper is a business whose prospects are far from promising. The future, they predict, belongs to the electronically transmitted word, not ink on paper. Such talk always has seemed premature to me, given the utility, convenience and durability of printed words.

Not surprisingly, therefore, such talk is anathema to someone who got his first newspaper delivery route at age 11 and went on to devote a lifetime to the newspaper craft. Thus, the sight of a state-of-the-art printing plant rising next door warms this old newsie's heart more than you'll ever know.

The powers that be at Knight Ridder, which owns The Star, wouldn't be making a capital investment of this magnitude unless they had full confidence in the future of the newspaper business. Newspapering is the essence of Knight Ridder's being, which means the decision was a calculated move by folks who know the industry inside and out.

If their business judgment is as sound as should be expected from experts, it probably means nobody alive on the planet today will live long enough to see newspapers go the way of dinosaurs.

The decision to make this massive bet on the future was doubly satisfying as a vote of confidence in the future of the

Helping with the May 12 groundbreaking for The Star's new printing plant were Gary Effren, senior vice president and CFO of Knight Ridder; Arthur S. Brisbane, president and publisher of The Star; Kansas City Mayor Kay Barnes; and P. Anthony Ridder, chairman and CEO, Knight Ridder. The Austin Company's Central Region office in Kansas City was chosen by Knight Ridder, owner of The Star, to provide architectural design, engineering and construction for the project. (The Austin Company photo) urban center of the city that gave birth to this newspaper. For more than six score years Kansas City has given The Star its identity. Moreover, it has given the entire readership area served by The Star its identity. If you're of this area, you're "from" Kansas City.

People may differ in their perspectives of the roles cities should play in our lives, but there's one thing that isn't in dispute. The city that gave birth to the metropolis and its institutions gives the entire area its identity.

The Star name is as much a part of Kansas City as jazz, barbecue and fountains. Thus, it's more than fitting that this bold business move be critically linked to the fortunes of the city so long chronicled by The Kansas City Star.

When the big day comes in early 2006, my fervent hope is to be there when those 60-foot-high presses make their maiden run. The vibrations you feel when standing in the vicinity of a giant rumbling high-speed newspaper press is an unforgettable sensation.

The power of the press has manifestations beyond characterizing the strength of the printed word. The power of a newspaper press also is a mighty physical force, which can be felt and heard. It is awesome to behold.

The rumbling of the presses thus becomes a metaphor for the power of the words being printed. Perhaps it also will impart some of that dynamic to the city it calls home. □

Star's new production plant a commitment to downtown

Kansas City Star - Knight Ridder chose downtown for The Kansas City Star's new $199 million production plant after going the other way in San Jose, Calif., chairman Tony Ridder said May 12.

"To this day, people in downtown San Jose blame the Mercury News for destroying the downtown by locating out away from the downtown," Ridder said at a groundbreaking ceremony for The Star's new plant. "We were not about to make that mistake in Kansas City."

Ridder spoke to an audience of civic leaders and newspaper employees across McGee Street from where The Star's 430,000-square-foot production facility is being built. Buildings on two city blocks northeast of The Star's offices at 1729 Grand Blvd. were razed to make way for the massive project. Windows from the razed buildings will be refurbished and reused in homes for Habitat for Humanity.

The building will rise from four stories on the south end to about eight stories on the north end, where four 60-foot-high presses will be installed.

Surrounding the area containing the presses will be copper panels and high-performance blue glass, providing views into the heart of the building from as far away as the downtown freeway loop.

About 75 percent of the building's interior spaces will use natural lighting.

The new plant is expected to begin producing newspapers in early 2006. □

Columbia Daily Tribune honors volunteers with Hero Awards

More than 200 people attended the second annual Hero Awards ceremony in Columbia on April 24.

Sponsored by the Columbia Daily Tribune and the Voluntary Action Center, the awards recognize local volunteers and groups for their contributions to the community.

Among the 44 nominees for the 2003 awards were doctors, lawyers, teachers, housewives, students and retired folks. They are in hospitals greeting patients, at home stuffing pillows for kids, in the street picking up trash, in community centers mentoring youngsters, on the road taking those in need to a doctor's office and in the boardroom debating de-isions important to Columbia.

Volunteers of Seize the Day have proved that ordinary daily errands such as providing transportation, assisting with grocery shopping, housekeeping, yard work, home repair and companionship for those in need can be heroic.

"Our volunteers are doing small things for so many people and have made a big difference," said Robin Reuben, executive director of the group.

The Tribune took over sponsorship of the popular volunteer recognition program after JC Penney Co. discontinued its national Golden Rule Awards a few years ago. □

Ralph Pogue's son publishes volume of father's columns

Fans of Ralph W. "Windy" Pogue of McDonald County, who died May 8, can find out what made him tick.

Pogue's son, Dwight, has published a book titled "Windy Pogue's Letters From a College Freshman, 1937-38."

Letters Pogue wrote home to his parents while he was in college are only part of the story. The book also relates Windy Pogue's work as a forester and his development of a firetruck specially designed to fight forest fires. It tells about his involvement with CCC camps created by President Roosevelt during the Depression.

"Windy Pogue's Letters" also has some of Ralph's award-winning articles and his columns by Piney Woods, Dr. R. Windward Pognik and Country Editor, which were regular features of his newspaper during the 1950s and 1960s.

Windy Pogue published newspapers in McDonald County for nearly 50 years. He retired in the 1990s.

The book may be purchased at McDonald County Press in Pineville for $18.95. To order a copy by mail, send a check for $25 to McDonald County Press, P.O. Box 266, Pineville, MO 64856. □

Chuck Haney starts weekly with son, others in Chillicothe

A group of stockholders that includes past MPA President Chuck Haney has announced the launch of a weekly newspaper in Chillicothe.

Other partners in the venture are Haney's son, Kevin, and Ralph D. Pearson and Sheila Pearson, who are siblings.

The Weekly News began publishing this spring, Haney said. It and the Ad Page are published by the same group. Kevin Haney started the Ad Page in 1998.

Chuck Haney worked at the daily Chillicothe Constitution-Tribune for more than 34 years. He left as publisher. Kevin Haney worked at the daily for 18 years. He left as general manager.

Chuck Haney has been working for area radio stations. For years he has been a host for radio programs about local sports. He also has been the announcer at the Winston Speedway and for the Chillicothe Mudcats baseball team.

Haney was president of MPA in 1995 and of the Northwest Missouri Press Association in 1989. □

Newspaper In Education report

Important lessons learned at national NIE conference

In May I was privileged to spend a week in Chicago with Emily Pohlsander attending the national Newspaper In Education conference.

Emily coordinates NIE efforts for several southwest Missouri newspapers in the Community Publishers group. And, like most community newspaper folks, NIE is just one of her jobs. She also is a writer for the Bolivar Herald-Free Press.

Hosted by the NAA Foundation, this convention is the only national gathering of NIE professionals. More than 250 people attended, including vendors, educators, and newspaper representatives from 38 states and three foreign countries.

I enjoyed experiencing this year's conference through Emily's fresh eyes and asked her to share her perspectives in this month's NIE Column.

These are her observations.

Back in college, one of my journalism professors took a survey of what beat we aspired to cover as journalists.

The popular choices included law enforcement, fire department, courts, business, religion. But mine was the only "education" vote in the classroom. Even the professor seemed to frown on my choice. After all, I was a promising student. Why wouldn't I want to pursue something more exciting and important, he seemed to be asking himself.

Dawn Kitchell is MPA's NIE coordinator. Contact her at (636) 390-2821; kitchell@fidnet.com.

Imagine my delight, then, when I attended a recent Newspaper In Education conference with 250 people as jazzed about the relationship between education and the newspaper as I am. During the time I was in Chicago at the convention, I learned ways to channel my energy about NIE to make the two-year-old program at the Bolivar Herald-Free Press even better.

Listening to speakers and presenters from large daily papers in metropolitan areas talk about their NIE programs can be discouraging, I discovered. They have NIE staffs, sponsors with deep pockets and access to expensive resources to include in their programs as in-paper features or special tabloids. I came to the convention representing a small paper in southwest Missouri. Just like that day in my journalism class, I seemed to stand alone.

But as I began to take notes, look over the materials disseminated by NIE professionals and vendors, and use some creative thinking, I realized that small papers have really got it made.

Through some useful tools I gained in Chicago, I am confident that small papers, like my own Bolivar Herald-Free Press, can have a program just as enviable as the large dailies.

The three lessons I learned at the convention are:

1. Workshops link teachers to your newspaper. I have not yet presented a teacher workshop, but I am excited to create one to put on at the end of the summer. NIE coordinators can use workshops to show teachers the seemingly limitless uses for newspapers in the classroom. And the great thing about teachers is that they are excellent brainstormers and will likely have ideas to share with each other.

Workshops can also get teachers on the same page when it comes to programs your particular newspaper offers. I plan to take the time I have with my teachers to let them know what the newspaper has planned for the upcoming Emily Pohlsander returned to Bolivar reinvigorated.

Consider attending July 10-11 NIE conferences in St. Joseph

MPA members are asked to help promote the NIE Seminar at MU July 31-Aug. 1. An ad can be downloaded from the MPA website NIE page.

A new page has been added to the NIE pages at mopress.com. The first link from the home page now gives you updates on current NIE projects, including the award Missouri Press won at the recent national conference in Chicago.

Central States NIE Conference, July 10-11: You are encouraged to participate in not only the July 11 Missouri NIE Conference, but the regional program as well on Thursday, July 10.

Information and a registration form can be found on the website.

This year's NIE Conference will be held at the Stoney Creek Inn at St. Joseph. The Central States program will begin at 8:30 a.m. July 10. MPA will host a reception that evening at the Pony Express Museum with special guest Kay Hively.

The Missouri State NIE Conference will be held Friday from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

NNA's new Best of Newspaper In Education Contest is open to all NNA member newspapers. Entries must be received by Aug. 1. Information and forms are available at naa.org. Awards will be presented during NNA's 117th Annual Convention in Kansas City Sept. 24-27. □

Using the newspaper Teachers can earn graduate credit for 2-day course at UMC

Missouri teachers can attend a two-day college course for K-12 teachers on using the newspaper as a resource in the classroom this summer at the University of Missouri, Columbia.

The Living Textbook – Integrating the Newspaper into the K-12 Curriculum, will cover media literacy and will look at ways to integrate the newspaper as a resource in English, language arts, social studies, math, science, technology and art. It will address ways to use the newspaper to improve standardized test scores and to achieve competency in areas required by the Show Me Standards.

The course will be held from 8-5 Thursday, July 31-Aug. 1, in Columbia. It is being offered through the MU Direct program for continuing and distance education.

Some newspapers around the state are providing scholarships for teachers in their areas as part of a statewide Newspaper In Education Teacher Ambassador Scholarship Program. Teachers who participate in this project will return to their communities to share what they learn with other educators.

The newspapers will pay course expenses and two nights' housing for their scholarship recipients. The participant may elect to take the course for graduate credit at his or her own expense.

For more information on this summer seminar for educators, visit mudirect.missouri.edu/catalog/courseinfo.asp or call (636)390-2821. □ year so they can be ready.

2. Publicity lets teachers, students and the community know the value of the newspaper. With budget cuts in so many schools, I plan to promote the newspaper as an inexpensive textbook, capturing history as it happens. Through the use of in-house advertisements, I will explain what is happening in NIE, recognize sponsors of the program and remind teachers and newspaper readers about upcoming NIE features.

3. Kids need to relate to the newspaper. I want to develop teacher guides that can be used in a miniature journalism unit. I figure the more students understand about how the newspaper is put together and what all the elements of a page are, the better equipped they will be in comprehending both its format and message. As someone who works in the industry as a writer and a layout person, I will make myself available for classroom visits and discussions.

I was 3 years old when I read the word "the" in the Bolivar Herald-Free Press. In the fifth grade, I wanted nothing more than to be a reporter. Today I love to read the newspaper every day.

However, we in the newspaper business can't count on kids developing that passion about our industry. We can't count on kids turning to the newspaper to learn about their communities. We can't count on kids bargain shopping in our classified ads. We can't count on today's students being tomorrow's readers without helping them realize the wealth of information they can find when they turn the pages of their community newspaper.

The program that will keep newspapers alive is Newspaper In Education.

Anne Tezon will speak at NNA meeting

Anne Tezon, publisher of the Hamilton Advocate and Braymer Bee, will make a presentation at the Newspapers and Community-building Symposium during the NNA Convention in September.

Sponsored by the Huck Boyd National Center for Community Media and the NNA Foundation, the symposium will feature proposals by 12 people. It will be held at the Hyatt Regency Crown Center Hotel in Kansas City during NNA's 117th Annual Convention.

Tezon's proposal is titled "Cheerleaders and Community Builders: How rural weekly newspaper publishers view their roles."

The purpose of the symposium is to bring journalism educators and publishers together in a forum that encourages discussion about current research that is relevant to community newspapers. □

Missourians make news with Business Editors

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — The Society of American Business Editors and Writers (SABEW) elected eight new board members at its 40th annual conference.

Among those elected to three-year board terms was Andre Jackson, assistant managing editor for news, St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

SABEW also presented lifetime achievement awards to James K. Gentry, dean and professor at the William Allen White School of Journalism and Mass Communications at the University of Kansas; and Randall D. Smith, assistant managing editor at The Kansas City Star.

Smith, who oversees metropolitan and state coverage for The Star, has received the 2003 Distinguished Achievement Award from SABEW. He was recognized for his role in helping raise $1.1 million to establish the SABEW-Missouri Endowed Chair of Business and Financial Journalism at the University of Missouri School of Journalism. □

Post-Dispatch columnist speaks at St. Louis U. Commencement

ST. LOUIS (AP) — St. Louis Post-Dispatch columnist Bill McClellan replaced former American Airlines chairman and chief executive Donald J. Carty as Commencement speaker at Saint Louis University.

The Roman Catholic university announced that, by mutual agreement, Carty would not participate in the May 17 Commencement. The agreement followed news that while American Airlines asked workers to accept $1.8 billion in annual pay cuts, the company had approved bonuses and pension payments for executives that would be protected even in bankruptcy.

Carty later resigned.

American, which purchased St. Louis-based Trans World Airlines in 2001, has a large presence in St. Louis. Hundreds of former TWA workers have been laid off, and some flight attendants had promised to protest if Carty spoke at SLU, where about 1,700 students graduated.

In choosing McClellan to speak, SLU president Lawrence Biondi cited McClellan's efforts to bring attention to social justice issues.

In his column April 24, McClellan wrote that Carty would have been a great speaker because disgrace "is a wonderful teacher."

A Catholic organization objected to McClellan's selection as Commencement speaker, saying he supports many issues contrary to the Catholic faith. In answer to the claims, McClellan told his own newspaper, "I plead guilty to everything, but I don't remember some of it." □

MU grad's book receives SPJ honor

The Society of Professional Journalists, the nation's top organization for working journalists, has designated Dr. Marlin Shipman's recently published book about the death penalty as the nation's outstanding research about journalism in 2002.

Dr. Shipman, a professor of journalism at Arkansas State University, earned his Ph.D. at the University of Missouri-

Columbia. He will receive the SPJ award July 11 at the National Press Club in Washington, D.C.

Shipman's book "The Penalty is Death," published by the University of Missouri Press, is an analysis of how newspapers reported on the executions of women in the United States from 1847 to the present. □

St. Louis reporter a Michigan Fellow

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — Twelve journalists have been chosen as Knight-Wallace Journalism Fellows at the University of Michigan for the 2003-2004 academic year.

Among the fellows, named April 28, and his study plan, is Vahe Gregorian, 43, reporter, St. Louis Post-Dispatch, history and demise of sportsmanship.

While on leave from their jobs, they will pursue study plans they have designed and attend twice-weekly seminars.

Each will receive a $55,000 stipend supported by gifts from foundations, news organizations and individuals. □

On the Move

✍ Maryville

Cody Snapp was named managing editor of The Maryville Daily Forum.

Snapp most recently was in charge of the paper's page layout. Before that, he was the lifestyles editor. He joined the staff in December 2001.

A native of St. Joseph, Snapp worked on the school newspaper at Northwest Missouri State University for a year and on the school's yearbook staff for three years.

✍ Columbia

Colin J. Kilpatrick has been named executive director of advancement of the University of Missouri School of Journalism. He will oversee the fund-raising operations for the school.

Kilpatrick formerly was vice president for advancement at Stephens College since 1995. He is a 1985 advertising graduate of the School of Journalism.

✍ Oak Grove

Sandi Laxson of rural Odessa has joined the news and advertising staff of the Oak Grove Banner and Town & Country Shopper.

A journalism graduate of William Jewell College, Laxson has written stories and taken pictures for equestrian magazines. She breeds and shows Quarterhorses.

✍ St. Louis

A native of St. Louis, Mink spent 16 years at the Post-Dispatch, most of them as a television critic. He took a similar position in 1993 with the New York Daily News.

Mink recently completed a book about NBC's "Today" show and then returned to St. Louis.

✍ Belton

Mary Renee Smith has joined the news staff of The Star-Herald. She replaced Charlie Morasch, a staff reporter for nearly two years, who moved to Ben-tonville, Ark.

Smith has more than seven years' experience in news and public relations. While attending Kansas State University she worked on the school newspaper.

Mary Renee Smith brings experience to Star-Herald.

She also worked for a radio station and did public relations work for a senior center in Manhattan, Kan., before taking a few years off to stay home with her children. Smith and her husband have four children.

✍ St. Joseph

Lindsey V. Corey was hired as communications coordinator at Benedictine College in Atchison, Kan. She previously was a reporter at the St. Joseph News-Press for nearly four years.

April Gangel was hired as an ad processor for the News-Press. She previously worked at JP Morgan Chase as an imaging and boarding tech.

✍ Joplin

Todd Taylor has been promoted to general manager of The Globe. Taylor formerly was administrative director, and before that human resources director. He has worked at The Globe nine years.

Shelli Willis, formerly benefits coordinator, now is personnel manager for The Globe. She's been with the paper six years.

Retail services supervisor Shannon Wyczynski has been promoted to retail advertising manager. She has 12 years with The Globe.

✍ St. Louis

Patrick L. Thimangu, 37, has joined the news staff of the St. Louis Business Journal. He took over the health care and banking/finance beats previously covered by Margie Manning. Manning left after eight years to open a business in Tampa, Fla.

Thimangu, a native of Kenya, has been a reporter for more than 10 years, most recently covering banking, utilities and energy for the Post-Dispatch. Before that he worked for the Dayton Business Journal, a sister publication of the St. Louis Business Journal.

✍ Osceola

Lola Palmer is the new business manager of the St. Clair County Courier in Osceola. She succeeded Wanda Raymond, who retired.

Palmer, a resident of Wisdom most of her life, studied computer science at State Fair Community College in Sedalia. She worked the past two years at Interstate Studios in Sedalia.

Palmer and her husband of 33 years, Larry, have a son and a daughter.

✍ St. Louis

The publisher of Take Five magazine, Sylvester Brown, Jr. has been named a Metro columnist for the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. Brown will write a column three times a week.

For the last 15 years Brown has been the publisher of Take Five magazine, which he founded in 1987 as the "black independent voice" in St. Louis while studying communications at St. Louis Community College at Forest Park.

Take Five continually earned journalism awards for its engaging coverage of the African American community in St. Louis. In April, Brown announced that Take Five would cease publication after its May edition.

A native of St. Louis, Brown has also worked as a freelance writer and has been a frequent contributor to the Post-Dispatch Commentary page writing op-eds about the human side of social issues in St. Louis. Brown is married to Victoria Anton-Brown and has four children. He replaces the late Post-Dispatch columnist Greg Freeman who died Dec. 31. □

Sylvester Brown, Jr., founded magazine while in college.

Credibility project expanding

In the wake of the latest controversies over media ethics, the AP Managing Editors Association is stepping up efforts to build credibility.

Through APME's National Credibility
Roundtables Project, more than 100 editors have talked with their communities over the past two years about credibility.
Those conversations have led to significant changes in news operations — from strengthened accuracy audits to expanded training in ethics.

Now APME, and newspapers in a Roundtables' e-mail feedback experiment, are querying readers across the country about whether they're willing to help the media get things right and correct mistakes, and, if so, how.

When asked for its input, the public can be a partner in building a credible news report, not an estranged adversary.

The deceptions practiced by Jayson

Blair at The New York Times will not come as jarring news to some readers.
For at least a decade, ample research has shown the public to be deeply suspicious of journalists — so suspicious that readers might not even complain about errors they see.

APME is committed to changing that.

To learn more about APME's Credibility Roundtables, go to apme.com and click on Credibility Roundtables. For a free copy of “Credibility in Action” and

Pascoes donate $30,000 to fund to build public day-care center

Former publisher spends "taxes" in his own town

Percy and Delma Pascoe, former owners of The Cuba Free Press, have donated $30,000 to the Crawford County Foundation. The money will be used to help build a public day-care facility in Cuba.

The donation qualified the Pascoes for tax credits through a Neighborhood Assistance Program grant administered by the Missouri Department of Economic Development. It resulted in nearly a dollar-for-dollar return in tax relief.

"Basically, my tax dollars went toward an admirable organization and its plan to improve the Cuba area, rather than straight to the state and federal governments. I like that," Percy Pascoe said. "It's not often that you can make an impact on the local level in this way."

Pascoe retired last fall as publisher of The Free Press, which he founded. He was in the newspaper business 42 years.

The day-care center will have a capacity of 90 children. Plans are to follow that project with a community activity center.

"Delma and I believe that this donation to the town that made our newspaper success possible will be a legacy that we can be proud of," Pascoe said.

Both of the Pascoes remain busy with volunteer activities, including distribution of meals to shut-ins and working at the local hospital and nursing home. Percy speaks at his church, works with wood and writes. □

64 students entered SPJ's essay contest in SW Missouri

Sixty-four area high school students entered essays in the "What A Free Media Means to America" contest sponsored by the Southwest Missouri Chapter of the Society of Professional Journalists.

First-place went to Dylan Gideon, a senior at Ozark High School in Ozark. Placing second was junior Liz Manning of Stockton High School. Hope Garner, a senior at Neosho High School, placed third.

Essays written by the top three will be published in newspapers and forwarded to national competition, in which they could win scholarships. □

Jefferson City newspaper plans to be in new plant by end of 2004

The News Tribune Co. Inc. of Jefferson City plans to begin printing in a new plant by the end of 2004. It has purchased a 4.3-acre site in Eastland Plaza Center.

The News Tribune publishes the afternoon Jefferson City Post-Tribune, the morning Daily Capital News, the Sunday News Tribune, the daily Fulton Sun and the weekly California Democrat.

It also prints publications for associations and organizations.

General manager Mike Vivion said the growth of the printing business and the need for modern presses and other equipment requires a new printing plant.

The News Tribune's downtown Jefferson City building will remain headquarters, with most departments of the newspaper remaining there. Editorial and advertising material will be sent electronically to the new printing plant. For those familiar with the capital city, the plant will be just east of Michael's Unforgettable Barbecue restaurant and southeast of Gerbes Supermarket. □

Grand marshal for this year's Dogwood Festival parade in April was Grant T. "Toughy" Richards, who has attended all 53 festivals.

Richards was the editor of the Reveille/Central Missouri Leader, now the Lake Sun, a half century ago. His friends call him either "Toughy," a nickname he earned in his youth, or "the editor." At one time Richards, now 83, was the youngest editor in Missouri.

St. Louis

Teachers with summer school classes can get free copies of the Post-Dispatch.

The paper's Newspaper In Education program offers the free newspapers and curriculum materials to any teacher in the circulation area.

Tuesday's papers will carry a seven-week serial story "Luke in a Really Big Pickle," which can be used by teachers in the lower grades.

An original story by Debbie Dadey and Marcia Thornton Jones, authors of the famed Bailey School Kids series, "Luke in a Really Big Pickle" tells the story of Luke, an average 9-year-old boy, and his special dog, Pickles.

Sometimes readers say 'thank-you'

Teacher appreciates publisher's backing of kids' reading project

To The Editor (of the Washington Missourian):

It's reading time in room 10. Children are whispering quietly to one another. Their eyes dance with excitement and now they begin "shushing" one another. It is Book Buzz time and today they will hear again the book titled "Courage" by another boy comes to his rescue. "You're brave. Nightlights only light a little bit. You're brave when it's mostly dark." Both boys smile. Two other children are discussing where some mountains might be located in Missouri.

As discussion time ends, children begin writing their reviews. "Use your best printing," one student tells another. "We don't want to embarrass anyone."

Washington Missourian

Bernard Waber. Today they will finalize their reviews.

The room is silent. Twenty-three students are listening intently and looking at the pictures. I hear whispers and sighs as the last words are read. Then, it is time to discuss our feelings.

A bright-eyed boy says, "I know how that girl felt holding in her giggles. I was afraid I would laugh and ruin our school play, but I didn't." I smile.

Another student confesses with a trembling lip, "I still leave on my night-light. Maybe I don't have courage." But

They both sneak a glance at me.

This precious moment in time is brought to me and my students because Mr. Bill Miller has used his newspaper, the Washington Missourian, as an instrument of love to open doors for our young readers.

Thank you for touching the lives of my students.

Paper 'stood up' for citizen

To the Editor (of the St. Joseph News-Press)

They say you can't unring the bell. Well, maybe you can.

A good friend of mine recently was accused of committing a serious federal offense. His name appeared on the front page of the newspaper. The bell had been rung.

A few weeks later, resume-building prosecutors realized the errors of their ways. Charges were dismissed. But remember, the bell had been rung. The innocent had been falsely accused.

Then something remarkable happened. The St. Joseph News-Press attempted to right this wrong. It started with a column by Steve Booher. He told the community (the accused) and his two colleagues were the targets of overzealous federal prosecutors.

A lead editorial followed, with much the same message.

The News-Press stood up for its community and its citizens. I salute you for your integrity and for helping restore the reputation of my friend.

Funding restored for student paper at UM-St. Louis

The Current, the student newspaper at the University of Missouri-St. Louis, will receive funding for the 2003-04 school year.

A committee of students denied the newspaper's first request for $44,000 in funding.

Stanford Griffith, editor of The Current, said the committee approved $38,200 for the paper, the same amount it received this year. That funding in the proposed activity budget has been forwarded to the interim chancellor for approval.

In April the committee decided to give The Current no money. Editors said the paper might have to fold, because the funding covered 20 percent of its budget.

The change came after an appeal to the committee by the paper's staff, during which they explained the newspaper's expenses.

Money for The Current comes out of activity fees collected from students.

Dr. Bill Taft donates press to museum

MPA's historian Dr. Bill Taft donated his hand-operated printing press to the Audrain County Historical Society and Saddlebred Horse Museum in Mexico.

When he was in Mexico High School, Taft and a couple of friends used the press to publish the Yellow Yap, an unofficial newspaper that often criticized the faculty.

Taft got the press from Mitchell White, then publisher of The Mexico Ledger, who is said to have bought it at a flea market on the town square for 50 cents.

Foundation captures award for Newspaper In Education

Cuba publisher takes city to court

Missouri Press Foundation's Newspaper In Education coordinator Dawn Kitchell has won for Missouri Press a national award for her exhaustive and exhausting efforts.

She and a small group of other Missouri NIE folks picked up the hardware at the NAA NIE Conference in Chicago in May.

Rules for the competition: "State or Regional NIE Organizations — Describe your efforts to serve area newspapers, including operational structure, materials and services offered, marketing and promotional efforts to create awareness of NIE and special events or programs. Detail how the organization supports member newspapers."

This award recognizes excellence in the TOTAL PROGRAM of a state or regional NIE organization."

Congratulations to Dawn, to the Missouri newspapers that have NIE programs, the MPA staff and to Missouri Press for wisely bringing Dawn on staff and supporting her excellent work.

That work continues. If your newspaper still doesn't have an NIE program, get with it now. You've got a national award-winning program to help you get started and guide you along.

An editor attending a recent meeting commented that NIE programs at their root are just another project to boost circulation. If he had said that to Dawn Kitchell, he'd have backed off that statement quickly with singed ears.

Newspapers that have NIE programs only because it boosts their circulation a little are flat doing it wrong. That is a good reason for having a program, but it certainly isn't the most important.

Read Emily Pohlsander's comments about her trip to Chicago in Kitchell's NIE column this month.

Central States NIE will hold its meeting in St. Joseph this summer. Missouri's NIE group will meet with the Central States bunch, then conduct some business of its own. Send someone from your paper, or attend yourself, and get deeper into Newspaper In Education.

MPA editor Kent Ford can be reached by email at kford@socket.net.

This month's magazine has lots of stories about the Sunshine Law. The Cuba Free Press has sued the Cuba City Council over conducting public business in closed meetings.

Publisher Rob Viehman said he's tired of writing editorials calling on elected officials to obey the law. Somebody's got to step to the plate and take violators to court. He's doing that with the help of MPA's counselor, Jean Maneke.

A quartet of newly elected school board members in St. Louis pulled a trick on the Sunshine Law. The group, which ran as a group with the support of the mayor, included former Mayor Vincent Schoemehl, who presumably knows the law and how to obey it.

After being elected by wide margins early in April the four met secretly before they were sworn in later that month. At their first meeting after being sworn in, they promptly elected each other to board offices.

Do we have a loophole in the law?

The four didn't violate the language of the law, but they absolutely violated the spirit of the law.

You don't have to leap into it right away, but keep the word "convergence" in mind. Convergence combines mediums like newspaper, television, radio and the internet into an information stew.

Someday your newspaper — or company — staff may have videographers and internet detectives on it. You may employ or yourself become one of those people who looks good on screen and can read the news with style in a pleasant, resonating tone.

Newspapers want to continue to be the number one destination for those seeking information about their communities. To do that, they'll have to provide information using audio, video and internet — convergence.

It's not a challenge. It's an opportunity. With all of those mediums, you'll be able to offer advertisers penetration to virtually your entire market.

Being mostly ignorant of high-level knowledge of most subjects, but interested just the same, has one advantage. Listening to experts talk about their field is fascinating.

University presidents Dr. Elson Floyd and Dr. Dean Hubbard talked about higher education at the editors meeting early in May. From a layman's perspective, these quiet-speaking gentlemen know their stuff. Regardless of whether they convince the Legislature to merge the UM system and Northwest Missouri State University, we're lucky to have them in charge of two of our great universities.

Those of you who don't take advantage of opportunities to hear people like Floyd and Hubbard cheat yourselves. As members of Missouri Press, you've got a continuing stream of such opportunities. Join in and get refreshed.

We find the time to do the things we want to do. If we turn out the lights, lock up the shop and leave town for a day or two, people will get along quite well without us. Most won't even miss us.

And our work? It will be there when we get back.

Join your newspaper brethren at the Show-Me Press or Ozark Press meeting this month. Registration forms are in the magazine.

If you can swing a stick, you can play golf. Sign up for the Porter Fisher Classic and enjoy a beautiful spring day at Lake of the Ozarks. How can you resist? □

Sunshine lesson in Springfield

Missouri Press Association legal consultant and media attorney Jean Maneke fields a minimum of 50 Sunshine Law related questions and concerns every month from newspapers throughout Missouri.

The questions range from incidents involving school boards that secretly gather inside a member's funeral home to discuss ousting the school superintendent to questions about whether city council members can attend a social function without posting a meeting notice.

Maneke spoke at a program titled "Getting the whole story: A guide to using the Sunshine Law" May 12 at The Library Center in Springfield. The program attracted nearly 40 people representing the news media, the general public and elected officials.

"I get calls from both weekly and daily newspapers and although there are times that groups or individuals are purposefully trying to skirt around the openness law, most of my calls stem from people who simply do not understand the law," said Maneke.

That is why Maneke encourages public and elected officials to "err on the side of openness" by always posting a notice. Other organizations, like quasi-public bodies and entities that enter contract agreements with public entities, are also subject to the Sunshine law.

"It is important to note that Missouri's Attorney General has issued an opinion that efforts to circumvent the Sunshine Law can be construed as a violation," said Maneke.

Documents generated by technology, like e-mails, are now getting a lot of attention when it comes to openness laws.

"Many entities are finding e-mails can easily become part of the public record," said Maneke.

Another issue that drew lots of questions was Maneke's observation that the law does not require public entities, boards or councils to have a public commentary section on a meeting agenda.

"If a topic is not on the agenda, officials should only listen during the public comments and steer clear of any dialogue or discussion on these public matters until it can be placed on the agenda and posted," said Maneke.

She also noted that the Sunshine Law does not require closed sessions.

"Closing a meeting is a privilege, not a requirement," said Maneke.

The program was designed to provide journalists and elected officials with a better understanding of how to use the Sunshine Law in reporting and to offer elected officials a better understanding of the law, according to Elizabeth Klay, president of the Southwest Missouri Chapter of the Society of Professional Journalists.

Event sponsors for this program included the Society of Professional Journalists Southwest Missouri Chapter, Missouri Press Association, Public Relations of the Ozarks and University of Missouri Outreach and Extension. □

Reviewing basics of Sunshine Law

Summer is coming, and as I write this, the Missouri Legislature is winding down its session. I'll write next month about any new provisions in Missouri law that will impact open records and meetings.

In the meantime, I've been asked to do a short primer on the law for folks who haven't heard me speak on it a hundred times. If you have summer interns, they might benefit from the material in this month's column.

The basic premise of chapter 610, Missouri's Sunshine Law, is contained in the section that says it is the public policy of the state that meetings, records, votes, actions and deliberations of public governmental bodies be open to the public.

In general, public governmental bodies are entities created by statute or ordinance, or committees appointed by such bodies which report back to the bodies regarding the expenditures of public funds. Also included are quasi-public bodies, which are generally entities which contract with public bodies or entities which spend public funds or act on behalf of public bodies.

Public records are records — including electronic records — that are being held by a public body.

Public bodies must give notice of all meetings 24 hours in advance, giving date, time and place of the coming meeting and posting an agenda of matters to be considered.

Minutes must be taken of all open meetings. All votes taken in meetings must be recorded and if they are roll-call votes, they must be recorded in that format. (All votes taken in closed meetings must be roll-call votes.)

Closed meetings are permitted under some circumstances, but never required. (Similarly, there is no requirement that members of public bodies keep confidential what is said in closed meetings.)

In order to close a meeting, or in order to close a record, a body must cite one of the 21 exceptions contained in Section 610.021.

If the reason for closing the meeting is exception 1, the "litigation" exception, the records and votes must be made public after the matter is finally settled.

Public bodies generally are not permitted to have confidentiality clauses in settlement agreements, unless a court order closes the agreement. Even in those cases, the amount paid must be made public.

If the reason for closing the meeting is exception 2, the "real estate" exception, the body must actually be leasing, purchasing or selling real estate and there must be a need to keep confidential the amount being offered for the property.

If the reason for closing the meeting is exception 3, the body needs to be talking about personal information about an actual employee. The only subjects that can be discussed are hiring, firing, disciplining and promoting. Other issues cannot be discussed in closed session.

Votes must be made public within 72 hours after they are taken.

There are other exceptions, but these are the key three most often cited.

When a body decides to hold a closed meeting, it needs to vote in open session by roll call vote to hold the closed meeting, putting in the minutes the exception that is being used. Notice of the closed

Jean Maneke
MPA
Legal Hotline

meeting must also be posted 24 hours in advance.

A body must appoint a custodian of records. All requests for records must be directed to that person. The custodian must respond to requests for records no later than 72 hours after the request is received. The response must be that access is available, that access will not be granted (citing the exception allowing the records to be closed) or that the custodian needs additional time to obtain the records. If part of the record is closed and part is open, the custodian must separate the parts, making the open part available.

The custodian may charge a fee for copies of records produced. Fees must be reasonable and not exceed the actual cost of search and duplication. No fee may be charged if only access is given and no copy is requested.

There are only three kinds of criminal records: Incident reports, arrest reports and investigative reports.

Incident reports and arrest reports are open records. Incident reports include the date, time, specific location, name of the victim and immediate facts and circumstances surrounding the initial report of a crime. Arrest reports record an arrest, with the charge.

Anything else is considered an investigative report, and they are closed until the investigation is inactive, which means law enforcement will not pursue the case, the time to file charges has expired, or a conviction based on the report is final.

If a court record is closed because the person arrested is found not guilty or receives a suspended imposition of sentence, or because the case is nolle prossed or dismissed, then the final action of the court or prosecutor must be made available to the public.

This is a simplified summary of the law, but I recently was reminded that it is important to do this occasionally for new staff members. I encourage you to keep this basic primer around the newspaper office for just such purposes.

I am always happy to ship out copies of the Attorney General's Sunshine Law handbook for your staff if you'll call and let me know how many you need. My number is (816) 753-9000. □

Weekly files Sunshine suit against city

Three Rivers Publishing, Inc., parent company of the Cuba Free Press, has filed a civil suit against Cuba's city council and mayor for alleged violations of the Missouri Open Meetings Law (also known as the Sunshine Law).

A legal petition filed in the Circuit Court of Crawford County April 23 makes reference to two separate meetings at which the council is said to have conducted business in closed session illegally. The Sunshine Law requires that all meetings of public governing bodies be kept open unless a specific exemption applies. Those exemptions that allow meetings to be closed are to be interpreted narrowly, according to the Sunshine Law.

The petition was drafted and filed by Kansas City attorney Jean Maneke on behalf of Three Rivers Publishing. It states that on Feb. 18, 2003, the mayor and council (minus Alderman Bill Lynch who was absent from the meeting) approved closing the meeting for reasons of litigation and personnel. In executive session, however, the council is alleged to have accepted an emergency bid for diesel fuel from MFA and agreed to purchase gasoline fuel from Delano until public bids could be sought.

The petition also notes a second alleged violation of the law on March 17, 2003, when the full council and mayor voted to deny use of Tangle Creek Park for a daycare/community center and to make an offer to the Crawford County Foundation for the old Paramount property, after going into closed session only for reasons of litigation.

Section 610.022.3 of the Missouri Open Meetings Law indicates that a public meeting may be closed only to the extent necessary to discuss the specified announced exception. The law states that no other business should be discussed during the closed or "executive" session.

The Cuba Free Press

Violations of the Sunshine Law are "nothing new" at Cuba's council meetings, said Three Rivers Publishing owner Rob Viehman.

"The time came when I felt like it was in the best interest of the community to take a stand on this issue and do something about it," Viehman said. "Writing editorials in the paper wasn't going to make any difference. I want the city council, along with other public governmental bodies in Crawford County, to know that we take the Open Meetings Law very seriously and that we expect them to follow it. Maybe this lawsuit will do that."

If council members and/or mayor are found guilty of the allegations, they each face possible fines of up to $1,000 (up to $500 on each of the two counts). They also could be required to cover Viehman's legal fees and be warned against further violations of the Sunshine Law.

When asked about the pending litigation, Mayor John Koch said the city was "very confident that we've violated no laws. We're anxious to get this issue before a judge so that it can be shown that we've done nothing illegal whatsoever and our meetings have been conducted properly."

Town leaders delay meeting to comply with law

Community leaders in Huntsdale want to make their town legal so it can get financial help meeting its needs.

Town trustees, the first elected in 74 years, called a meeting to elect a mayor and clerk. They had to postpone the meeting to comply with the Sunshine Law. Meetings must be announced 24 hours in advance.

Nobody knew until the trustees received copies of the Sunshine Law from the Columbia Daily Tribune.

Huntsdale, riding the west bank of the Missouri River in Boone County, has 26 adults, seven kids and an assortment of uncounted pets. The 2000 Census overlooked them.

The state didn't know the little community existed, either, so it didn't approve a $2,000 Natural Resources grant to help erect a Lewis and Clark historical marker.

The state had approved the grant but took it back when no tax number for Huntsdale could be found to verify its existence. Auditors need more than a spot on the map.

That action sparked the movement to incorporate as an official town. Huntsdale's leaders said they plan to visit with people in McBaine, Hartsburg and Rocheport, other riverbank towns in Boone County, about applying for grants and running a town.

Wants are modest. One resident would like a city park. Another would like a sign that reads "Slow. Kids."

Journals honored for Bosnia page

The International Institute of Saint Louis has presented the South Suburban Journals with its International Institute Impact Award for the newspapers' efforts to share news and community information with Bosnian newcomers.

On Sept. 19, 2001, the Journal's Southwest City, South Side and South County editions debuted "St. Louis Novosti" (St. Louis News) for the estimated 35,000 Bosnian newcomers who now live in the metro area, most of them in South St. Louis and South County.

Throughout its nearly 18-month run, the Bosnian page in the Journals has published Bosnian-language translations of stories published in English in previous editions of the paper. The translated stories cover topics relevant to newcomers, such as health, education and local government issues. The page also features special events and social service information as well as translated advertising, all aimed at Bosnians.

In accepting the award, managing editor Buck Collier said he was reminded of the famous line from a Grateful Dead song, "What a long, strange trip it's been," he said.

Collier was referring to the learning of providing news and information to the area's fast-growing Bosnian population – the second-largest resettlement of Bosnians in the United States, behind only Chicago. The Journals also recognized the page as an opportunity for local businesses to target their advertising to Bosnians as a consumer group.

The International Institute Impact Award has been established to recognize St. Louis area businesses and organizations that make a special effort to improve the quality of life for ethnic groups in the increasingly diverse community.

The South Journals organization is the first recipient of this honor.

Since 1919, the International Institute has been providing adjustment services to new Americans in St. Louis. Last year, more than 10,000 refugees and immigrants representing 85 ethnicities learned English, found jobs and received counseling services at the agency. □

• PINEVILLE: The Pineville Herald, after 43 years, ceased publication the last week in May.

The Herald was purchased more than a year ago by the owners of the Pineville Democrat. Miss Clarice Hamilton was the publisher.

• ST. MARYS: The St. Marys Weekly Review was only a few hours late in publishing during the late May floods in spite of the fact that it was impossible to get type or copy to and from Herculaneum where the type is set.

• SIKESTON: The Sikeston Standard has purchased a Duplex press and expects to have it installed soon. The Standard already has an Associated Press franchise and expects to become a daily as soon as conditions justify the change from the present twice-a-week publication.

• CONCORDIA: The Concordian will feature pictures of men and women in the armed services under the sponsorship of a group of business men.

The business men will write personal letters in their advertisements to be placed beside a picture of a service man or woman. The editors plan to mail copies of the paper to those whose pictures appear.

• ROLLA: The Rolla Herald, oldest newspaper in Phelps County, will become a daily publication on July 6, according to publisher William B. Breuer.

• MAITLAND: The Maitland Herald suspended publication with its issue of May 14, and its subscription list has been taken over by the Mound City News-Independent.

• PLATTE CITY: "Any church, lodge, veteran or social organizations that will not at least let The Gazette bid on their printing will not get free publicity for their money-making projects," says an article on the front page of the June 11 issue of The Platte County Gazette.

In his weekly column on an inside page Editor Jas. G. Cleveland Tibbetts continues by saying, "On our front page this issue we stress our policy of not giving free publicity to any organization who trot elsewhere with printing or advertising, and then try to soft-soap us into giving FREE publicity. In our checkered career once we learned that lesson the hard way by impairing our bank credit by giving away our bread-and-butter space while our alleged friends took their paying jobs to other printing plants."

• JEFFERSON CITY: James C. Kirkpatrick of Jefferson City has been re-elected president of the Central Missouri State College Board of Regents.

Mr. Kirkpatrick, now executive director of the Missouri Chain Stores Council, formerly was on the staff of the Warrensburg Star-Journal, and more recently, the Jefferson City News and Tribune.

• ST. LOUIS: Earl Reitz, a pressman

at the Post-Dispatch, underwent amputation of his right hand recently after it was injured in rollers of a printing press. Reitz was threading paper through the press when the accident happened.

• PALMYRA: Donald H. Sosey, publisher of the Palmyra Spectator, received a Missouri Honor Award for Distinguished Service in Journalism for his newspaper from Dean Earl F. English of the Missouri School of Journalism.

The award cited the Spectator as being perhaps the oldest newspaper in the country to be continuously operated by one family.

• KENNETT: The Missouri Press Association has presented its Gold Cup awards for best daily and weekly newspaper to the Kennett Dunklin Democrat and the Washington Missourian.

• OWENSVILLE: The Gasconade County Republican, formerly published by Warden-Murray Publishing Co., Inc., has been purchased by the former co-publishers, Mr. and Mrs. R.E. Warden.

New members of the corporation are Tom Warden, editor, and Don Warden, advertising manager.

• STOVER: Sale of the weekly Tri-County Republican has been announced by H.A. Harrell, publisher since the paper's founding in 1911. Management of the paper has been assumed by Mr. and Mrs. Matthew Washlick. Mrs. Washlick is a daughter of Harrell.

Harrell will remain on the staff as editor emeritus. The 82-year-old publisher was honored by Missouri Press Association in 1961 for 50 years of continuous publication.

Never having taken a vacation in all those years, Harrell once commented: "I never had time to train a printer." □
