An honor and privilege to serve Missouri Press

What Fifty Said: When I was young my teachers were the old. I gave up fire for form till I was I suffered like a metal being cast. I went to school to age to learn the past.

Now I am old my teachers are the young. What can't be molded, must be cracked and sprung. I strain at lessons fit to start a suture. I go to school to youth to learn the

't has been my pleasure to serve as Missouri Press Association President in 2017. I have thought for some time that we have a fine staff and a good operation at the MPA office. As close as I was to the staff and the operation for many years, I was not so directly involved until this year. And now having lived it, I know that I was right all along. My sincere thanks to my MPA staff family for all the kindness and courtesy that they have shown me this year.

And thanks to the Board, for your patience and your support.

But mainly, thanks to the membership. Without whom, there is no ship at all. Thanks for your faith in me and thanks for just showing up whether it is at an event or calling a legislator or working with us in some way. And thanks for telling the truth when it would have been easier not to.

Next year my dear friend Carol Stark of Joplin will be the MPA President. I look forward to working with her. Too few women have led this organization.

One of my favorite honors this year was to represent Missouri at the National Newspaper Association Convention in Tulsa.

During that convention our own Trevor Vernon was awarded the 2017 Daniel M. Phillips Leadership Award. Along with the Amos and McKinney Awards, it is one of just three annual honors bestowed by this national organization. Because the Amos and McKinney focus on lifetime achievements in community journalism, they tend to honor those in retirement or closing their careers. The Phillips award is only for those under 40 years of age. It focuses on service to the industry and service to your community. It also focuses on the future.

Vernon has worked to smartly expand his newspapers while volunteering to propel all Missouri newspapers forward, he is quite deserving of this honor. Qualified in spades, some might say. My favorite part of the ceremony occurred during his acceptance speech when he brought his children, 6 year-old Owen and 9 year-old Lilli, to the stage with him. He gave credit to friends and mentors, while acknowledging his family's roots in community journalism. True to the award. Vernon focused on the future while his children, his wife, his parents and his grandfather looked on. All the while, I could not help but to ponder that maybe someday Lilli or Owen might receive that same award for doing so much to move the industry of their day into the future.

Thanks. Cheers. And I leave you with this:

MPA elects 2018 officers and directors

By Missouri Press Staff

Carol Stark, editor of The Joplin Globe, was elected president of the Missouri Press Association Friday, Sept. 29, during the 151st Annual MPA Convention in Springfield.

A southwest Missouri native, Stark has worked for The Globe since 1983, beginning as a reporter and working her way up to editor 10 years ago. She has served on the MPA Board of Directors since 2013.

Her newspaper career began at the age of 12 with an article for The Carthage Press about her final year in a one-room schoolhouse and country school consolidation. She was editor of her high school newspaper, and at 17, she began working full-time for The Carthage Press while attending Missouri Southern State University in Joplin, where she also worked for the college newspaper.

In addition to her editor duties at The Globe, Stark has worked to foster better relationships between the newspaper and its readers, including holding reader advisory sessions. She has also led high school journalism workshops, served as an adviser to students on MSSU's The Chart, and worked with students on Joplin High School's student newspaper, The Spyglass.

Stark was named Local Media Association Editor of the Year in 2011 for her work overseeing coverage of Joplin's EF-5 tornado. She has also served three times as a juror in the selection of the Pulitzer Prize.

Stark will succeed Jeff Schrag, publisher of The Daily Events in Springfield, as MPA president Jan. 1. Schrag will continue on the MPA Board of Directors through 2018 as immediate past president.

Other 2018 MPA officers and directors elected Sept. 29 include: First Vice President, James White, Benton County Enterprise, Warsaw; Second Vice President, Trevor Vernon, Eldon Advertiser; Secretary, Bryan Jones, Versailles Leader-Statesman; Treasurer, Sandy Nelson, The Courier-Tribune, Liberty.

Directors for one-year terms: Roger Dillon, Shannon County Current Wave, Eminence (Paul Berry's open position); and Julie Moreno, Independence Examiner (Jacob Brower's open position).

Director for a twoyear term: Tianna Brooks, Mountain View Standard News (Trevor Vernon's open position).

Directors for three-year terms: Mary Wilson, Jackson County Advocate, Grandview; Donna Bischoff, St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Continuing on the MPA Board in 2018 will be directors Liz Irwin, Missouri Lawyers Media, St. Louis; Michael Jensen, Sikeston Standard-Democrat; and Steve Tinnen, Clinton County Leader, Plattsburg.

Jacob Brower, Monett Times/Cass-ville Democrat was elected as the National Newspaper Association state chair.

Retiring from the MPA Board in December 2017 are Dennis Warden, Gasconade County Republican, Owensville; Dennis Ellsworth, St. Joseph News-Press; and Jane Haslag, Jefferson City News Tribune.

Four join Missouri Press Hall of Fame

27th class was inducted during 151st Annual Convention

The 151st Annual Convention and Trade Show in Springfield included the induction of Missouri Press Association's 27th Hall of Fame class.

This year's inductees were the late Kenneth G. Meuser, former publisher of The Monett Times; the late Arthur Aull, former publisher of the Lamar Democrat; Vicki Russell, past MPA president and former publisher of the Columbia Daily Tribune; and Bob Mitchell, former publisher of the Cassville Democrat.

This was the 27th group to be inducted into the Newspaper Hall of Fame, established by MPA in 1991.

Vicki Russell served as associate publisher and then publisher of the Columbia Daily Tribune from 1990 until the newspaper was sold in 2016. She also served as a member of the MPA Board of Directors from 2002 until her presidency in 2009 and is currently the Missouri Press Foundation Board president.

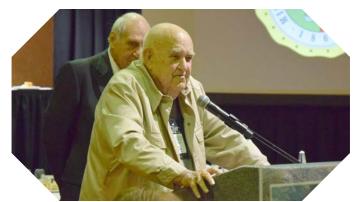

Bob Mitchell is the former editor and publisher of the Cassville Democrat, starting as editor in the early 1950s, and the last in a long line of family owners for the weekly newspaper started in 1871. Even though Mitchell sold the Democrat in 1996, he remains actively involved, writing a weekly column.

Arthur Aull edited and published the Lamar Democrat from 1900 until his death in 1948, captivating the community with his all-the-news-is-fit-to-print style of journalism. The newspaper boasted a circulation of 4,000, substantially more than the population of Lamar, with readers in all 48 states, as well as in England and Canada.

Kenneth Meuser ran The Monett Times for 30 years, beginning in 1942, during which time he served as a voice for the community, including calling for economic development and pushing for better schools, streets and all things that make a community good for the people who live there.

At right, Vicki Russell is joined by fellow Chillicothian, as well as fellow MPA Hall of Famer and fellow former MPA President, Chuck Haney during the induction ceremony of this year's Missouri Press Hall of Fame class. (Staff photos)

At left, Bob Mitchell speaks to the Hall of Fame crowd after being inducted. Mitchell talked about his start in journalism, including his military career, as well as emphasized the important role newspapers have in fighting back against fake news.

Melody Metzger, editor of the Lamar Democrat, accepts the Pinnacle Award for Arthur Aull from MPA President Jeff Schrag. Aull's "all-the-news-that's-fit-to-print" style made him one of Missouri newspapers' most infamous figures.

The late Kenneth G. Meuser's son and daughter, Ken Meuser and Anne Meuser, attended this year's Hall of Fame ceremony to accept their father's award. The siblings said their dad would have appreciated being recognized by his peers for the work he loved.

Do you know someone who deserves to be in the Missouri Press Association's Hall of Fame? Get your nominations in by the March 31 deadline to be considered for 2018's class.

The two young journalists were nominated by their respective publishers, Donald Dodd and Jacob Brower, and recognized for the hard work they do for each publication during the Better Newspaper Contest luncheon held Sept. 30 during the Association's 151st Annual Convention and Trade Show.

By Missouri Press Staff

More than 300 people representing close to 80 newspapers traveled to Springfield in late September to celebrate Missouri Press Association's 151st Annual Convention and Trade Show.

Spanning Thursday night to Saturday afternoon, Sept. 28-30, the convention featured panels on public notices and magazines, as well as speakers covering topics ranging from how to motivate future leaders and new ways to generate revenue.

In the Missouri Press Foundation's Better Newspaper Contest, more than 70 newspapers received awards and several dozen had representatives at the Saturday luncheon to receive those awards. A listing of the winning newspapers begins on page 11 of this month's Missouri Press News. Full contest results are available online at mopress. com/better-newspaper.

Photo galleries for this year's convention are available online through MPA's website and Facebook page.

A public notice panel held Friday afternoon during this year's Annual Convention and Trade Show featured state representatives and senators from around the Springfield area. While members of the panel said newspapers have to work to keep themselves relevant as the way people get information changes, the tone of the panel was generally supportive for keeping public notices in newspapers for now. Participating in the panel were, from left, moderator Liz Irwin, State Rep. Lyndall Fraker, Senators Jay Wasson and Mike Cunningham, and State Rep. Crystal Quade.

Secretary of State Jay Ashcroft was among the speakers during this year's Annual Convention and Trade Show held Sept. 28-30 in Springfield. Ashcroft spoke about various programs his office is involved with, including the Safe at Home program.

SEMO journalism students expand their skills at Rust Center for Media

1-year-old center brings all media disciplines together in one building

By Matthew Barba

Missouri Press News

The history of teaching journalism in Missouri is a long and proud one, with the state becoming home to the world's first school of journalism more than 100 years ago. While a lot of attention is heaped upon that school in Columbia, the reality is this state is home to college programs that are just as widely varied as the students studying the craft.

In 2016, the Rust family, publishers of the Southeast Missourian in Cape Girardeau and more than 40 other newspapers throughout the Midwest, ensured students at Southeast Missouri State University would have a dedicated place to study journalism through a significant donation to the university to support a center for the study of mass communications. The Rust Center for Media was dedicated in October 2016, in honor of Gary and Wendy Rust, in whose names the donation was made by sons Rex, Jon and Gary II.

The Southeast Arrow, SEMO's student-run newspaper, moved into the center in 2016, while the school's film, television and other organizations made the move this school year. Now a year later, the students who benefit most from this donation are finding the center's 13,000-square-feet of dedicated media space to be a boon to their efforts to study and innovate the future of journalism.

Dr. Tamara Zellars Buck, standing, works with students on the Southeast Arrow in new space that is part of the Rust Center for Media. Made possible by a donation from the Rust family, the center brings together all of Southeast Missouri State University's mass communication disciplines in one building. (Submitted photo)

Dr. Tamara Zellars Buck is the faculty advisor for The Arrow. She explained that not only are students appreciative of the learning space and all it offers, but they are using it to explore the future of journalism and media.

"Students love it, because it's a large facility but it's also the first time that we actually have dedicated space for each of the types of media that we produce," Zellars Buck said. "We put a lot of work into finding out what a 21st century media workspace looks like. We had Pintrest pages where professional alumni would post things, so as we designed this facility, we really wanted it to represent the future of media workspaces."

On the first floor, there is classroom space and studios for video production. The bottom floor has offices for The Arrow, SEMO's student newspaper, as well as offices for student advertising firm SECreative, and student public-relations firm Riverfront PR.

Thanks to the launch of the Rust Center, this spring and summer SEMO renovated the Grauel Language Arts Building, where faculty offices are and classroom instruction takes place. The Arrow was formerly located in the Grauel building, as well.

Zellars Buck said within the Rust Center for Media there are content creation spaces that allow collaboration between different forms of journalism, including a webcast room that overlooks the newsrooms and provides a "behind the mirror" look at news production at the university. A separate podcast studio allows students more interested in audio production to work with everyone from other students to musical artists on in-studio performances.

"These are things that were just a dream for us just over a year ago," Zellars Buck said.

Students are seeing the benefits of having so many different disciplines working together in the same space, Zellars Buck said.

"One example of the collaboration that we've already seen was a special report on sexual assault that our newspaper staff created last year," Zellars Buck explained. "We had some issues with design and developing this project from a visual standpoint. Some of our advertising students stepped in and said they could help package the story with the tone that we were wanting to set.

"They heard us discussing the project and wanted to be part of the conceptual design. It turned out wonderfully, and that's something that wouldn't have happened without this facility," she said.

Zellars Buck said another example came this spring when the studentrun advertising firm was "hired" by the newspaper's staff to write advertorial content for an advertiser.

"We sold advertising space and the client wanted some advertorial," she said. "We made a conscious decision that we didn't want editorial staff writing the content. This was our first attempt at it, but it seems like it worked great for all sides."

The new center has also allowed for students to collaborate with professionals in their chosen area of study. An agreement with the Southeast Missourian provides professional guidance for production of The Arrow in both print and online, while an agreement with local television station KFVS12 allows students to produce news and public affairs programming to air on the station's CW affiliate in the area.

Lucas Presson, assistant publisher of the Southeast Missourian and general manager for the Arrow Digital partnership, said the collaboration between the newspaper and the Rust Center has proven beneficial in a number of ways.

"The Rust Center for Media is an exciting development for the mass media program at Southeast Missouri State University," Presson said. "While space in itself does not dictate success, having the students located on media row — next to a leading agency and daily newspaper and across the street from a radio network of stations and CBS affiliate — gives the students even more opportunities to cross collaborate with media professionals.

"Since our partnership with the university, the Southeast Missourian has hired several students. That's a benefit to us, but it's also an opportunity for top students who prove themselves ready and interested in working in media."

The Missourian has five media professionals who regularly work with students at the Rust Center, providing more opportunities for collaboration and a dynamic atmosphere, Presson said.

"Students who produce content for the Arrow also have the opportunity for their content to be picked up by the Southeast Missourian," he explained. "So if a student hits it out of the park and the story is relevant to the Missourian readers, we may reprint it with their byline in the newspaper and online. For the student, that's exciting. And it gives them another example of being published."

According to SEMO, the school has nearly 400 mass communication students in the four major focus areas of advertising, multimedia journalism, public relations and TV/film. SEMO's program is one of about 120 programs in the nation accredited by the Accrediting Council on Education in Journalism and Mass Communication.

"The university's mass media department has had many wins over the last several years," Presson said. "Between classroom instruction and real-world experience working at the Arrow, these students have an opportunity to develop into top multi-media professionals. Whether print, audio, TV or digital, the opportunities are available through an accredited program at Southeast Missouri State."

What the students say ...

Katelyn Mary Skaggs, junior News Editor, The Arrow

"I think it's a wonderful building. It's nice to have a home with all of the other departments because it makes it so much easier to collaborate.

We're working with students in other areas all the time, they're giving us feedback and it's been very helpful.

We've started tossing around ideas, but the other groups are even coming to us and asking if there's any video work we need done."

Sydney Rodgers, senior

Marketing Manager, The Arrow

"[The new center has] been very different for me because most of the people who work at The Arrow are journalism, where I'm a public relations major. I have a journalism background but this has really opened me up to different ideas and perspectives.

This center has also given us a chance to work closely with the Southeast Missourian, but it's really just a good opportunity for all of the students at SEMO to branch out and have more voices heard in new ways."

Rebecca Gangemella, junior Reporter, The Arrow

"[The Rust Center for Media has] been really awesome to have all of this available to us. I got my start writing for The Arrow, but when Dr. Buck found out I was interested in broadcasting, we started looking for opportunities.

Now I do sports reporting and host a pre-game show with another student. It's been really nice to get to see both sides, as well as the behind-the-scenes aspect of the control room and the editing process. The best part is, it's all right here in this building."

Five inducted into Photojournalism Hall of Fame

Kansas City

Laura Hockaday

Laura Rollins Hockaday, 79, longtime writer for The Kansas City Star and groundbreaking society editor, died Oct. 24, 2017, in Kansas City from complications associated with viral pneumonia. She worked at The Star from 1962 to 2000, working everything from "Women's News" to travel editor to society editor, and she is notable for expanding the newspaper's coverage of the under-recognized contributions of African-Americans and Hispanics in the Kansas City area. A weekly column as The Star's people editor was known for introducing readers to roles models throughout the community. In addition to many friends from the newspaper and other family, she is survived by two nieces, Wendy and Laura, and their families

Raytown

Randy Battagler

Randall "Randy" Eugene Battagler, 65, of Raytown died Aug. 23, 2017. At the age of 16, he began his career in newspapers in the pressroom at the Richmond Daily News. He became an award-winning photographer and went on to work for newspapers in several communities, including Excelsior Springs, Lebanon, Liberty, Nevada and Dallas. Texas. He was co-owner of the newspaper in Oak Grove, and he concluded his career as owner and publisher of The Raytown Times. In his memory, the family received donations to publish a final issue of The Raytown Times. In addition to his wife, Linda, he is survived by two children; two step-sons; six grandchildren; several siblings; and many other family and friends.

SCR*A*PBOOK

- St. Louis The St. Louis American was a partner with Huffington Post in September to kick off a national listening tour. HuffPost's tour bus, outfitted with video recording equipment, traveled to two dozen communities throughout the country, gathering video interviews of members of the community. In St. Louis, 38 interviews were collected in the tour's initial three hours. The tour was scheduled to conclude at the end of October.
- Kansas City The sale of The Star's 106-year-old headquarters at 1729 Grand Blvd. in downtown Kansas City was completed earlier this year. In selling the building, Mc-

- Clatchy will move about 200 employees, including editorial, advertising, audience engagement and technology to The Star's Press Pavilion on McGee Street. Kansas City-based 3D Development purchased the former newspaper headquarters.
- Columbia The University of Missouri received a $21.6 million donation from 1974 journalism graduate David Novak. The donation will be used to establish a new leadership institute in the Missouri School of Journalism. Based on a leadership program designed by Novak, the institute will offer undergraduate and graduate training, certificates and seminars on leadership.

Warsaw

Jack Krier

Longtime Missouri weekly newspaper publisher Jack Krier, 77, of Warsaw died Oct. 12, 2017, at a Des Moines, Iowa hospital after suffering a heart attack. Krier's long career was devoted to keeping small town newspapers alive. Over his life, he was owner/publisher of the Wellsville Optic News, Taney County Times, Stone County Gazette and Buyer's Guide, as well as several other publications in other states. At the time of his death, he was president of the Carrollton Democrat and Carroll County Buyers Guide; Lexington News and Lexington Dollar Saver; Higginsville Advance and Lafayette County Shopper; Santa Fe Times; Glasgow Missourian; St. Clair County News and Buyers Guide; Appleton City Journal; Humansville Star Leader; Rich Hill Mining Review; Hickory/Polk Buyers Guide; Henry County Buyers Guide; Benton County Shoppers Guide; Windsor Review; Lincoln New Era; Cole Camp Courier; Norborne Democrat-Leader; and 16 weekly publications in northwest Kansas and southern Nebraska. Following retirement in 2015. he remained active with his publications. He is survived by his wife, Kathy, and five children and their families.

• Slater – In August, Missouri Senator Denny Hoskins and Representative Dave Muntzel visited the Main Street News to present publisher/editor Jean E. Black with resolutions recognizing the 20 years the SMSN has been in operation. The Main Street News, previously the Slater News-Rustler, was purchased by Black in 1997, returning local ownership of the newspaper back to Slater.

A chicken in a pot, and all of the questions such a situation raises, was the subject of Laura Simon's first place-winning Best Feature Photograph entry for the Southeast Missourian in Cape Girardeau. Seriously, what's going on here? Judges commented that the girl's eyes and angles in the image draw in the viewer.

Be on the lookout for your 2018 dues

Dues statements for Missouri Press Association members were mailed in late October.

Please be on the lookout for your dues letter. Dues payments may be paid in installments, and you are asked to contact MPA to arrange a payment schedule.

MPA dues may also be deducted from advertising checks. Dues not paid by Feb. 28, 2018, will automatically be deducted from advertising checks.

Benefits of MPA membership includ legal advice from MPA hotline attorney Jean Maneke; listing in the MPA Newspaper Directory; advertising campaigns; press credentials for your staff to cover local, state and national events; lobbying for Missouri newspaper issues; discounts for MPA events; and much more.

Contact Kristie Williams at 573-449-4167 or kwilliams@socket.net if you have any questions about MPA membership.

St. Louis Zoo's Kali is subject of 2018 NIE serial

8-chapter story follows polar bear from Alaska to Missouri

From Helen Headrick

Missouri Press NIE Director

Kali, a polar bear cub, made news across the country when he was just a few months old. Rescued after hunters shot his mother, Kali quickly became famous. Polar bears are known to regularly travel long distances, but Kali may take the record. He was born near Alaska's northwest coast, rode on an ATV to the town of Point Lay, and has had three plane trips: to Anchorage, Alaska; to Buffalo, New York; and finally to St. Louis, Missouri.

This January, the National Newspaper Association Foundation and the Missouri Press Foundation are offering newspapers the opportunity to publish a free 8-chapter serialized story entitled "Kali: A Polar Bear's Tale." This heartwarming tale takes a small orphaned cub from one adventure to another as he grows and learns how to be a polar bear.

"Kali: A Polar Bear's Tale" is produced by the Missouri Press Foundation and available to newspapers at no cost through a special partnership between NNA and MPF from Jan. 1 through June 30, 2018.

Each chapter in this 8-chapter story includes a newspaper activity. A companion teacher guide will be available to distribute to teachers or post on your newspaper's website.

This is the 10th year that NNA members can take advantage of a free serialized story through the Reading Across America campaign. The goal is to have young readers across the nation reading inside their community newspapers in 2018.

If your newspaper is interested in participating in the Reading Across the America project and publishing the serialized story, visit http://mopress. com/nie-serial-stories to get the download code.

Finding Kali

It was cold that day as March always is so high above the Arctic Circle. Snow still blanketed the ground, but the thin light of early spring allowed James a better visibility to look for caribou or any large animal--anything he could hunt and bring back to his village.

The people of Point Lay, Alaska, on the coast of the Chukchi Sea, relied on skilled substance hunters like James and others. They hunted for meat to help feed the people > in their village. The meat would be given to village elders and dispersed. Hopefully there would be enough left to freeze and store for later. Food, which could be purchased for a few dollars in the lower 48 states, was very expensive here; noodles could cost $13.00 and red or green peppers as much as $10.00 each. The meat James brought back was important to the villager's survival.

A big animal would be best, James thought to himself. And that's when he saw the polar bear. Being a native Alaskan subsistence hunter, James was legally allowed to hunt polar bears, although it was rare for him to take one. This bear, crossing the sea ice about 100 yards in front of him, would be his ninth in a lifetime of hunting.

A bear this size will give us plenty of meat, he thought. Enough to feed several families for sure. James did not take killing a polar bear lightly. These animals were respected and revered in Inupiaq culture. But James knew the meat was essential for his village, so he took what opportunities luck and nature presented to him. He shot the bear.

When the bear was down, James approached it. Seeing that it was truly dead, he began to roll it over. That's when he noticed something different. The other bears that James had hunted had been large, burly males, with paws the size of dinner plates. This bear was a bit smaller, and on its stomach he saw a row of dark teats. This bear was a nursing sow. Somewhere, he thought, she has a cub.

James was crushed. He had not realized that the bear was a female, especially a nursing mother. "We've got to find the den," James said to his hunting companion. "There's a cub out here somewhere, and it won't survive for long without her."

The two men set out through the bitter wind and spring sunlight, until they saw the den. There, barely perceptible on the icy landscape, was the dark opening to the den of a polar bear.

Ask Zoo Keeper Carolyn

How many cubs does a bear have at one time?

Polar bears generally give birth to between one and four wee cubs at a time, according to the Defenders of Wildlife organization. Two cubs or "twins" are the most common, followed by single births.

Sunshine should clarify use of private email

In September, this column looked at whether the Sunshine Law in Missouri applied to messaging between members of a public body that are routed through social media websites or apps, such as Facebook Messenger and Twitter.

This month, let's consider whether it's time for Missouri's legislature to address the basic issue of if the open records law should apply to private email addresses used by members of a public body. There's no doubt that emails that go through a ".gov" address are retained within the public body's computer server and therefore are public records under the Sunshine Law's definition of that term. But what about messages sent on a "gmail" account or other personal account of an elected official or other governmental employee?

We see how this has been the subject of much national news in the last year, ranging from Hillary Clinton's private email use to, more recently, private email addresses used by Jared Kushner and Ivanka Trump. But rather than deal with federal issues, let's keep this on the local level.

Should the Missouri legislature pass a bill next session clarifying private email addresses used by members of public governmental bodies are subject to the Sunshine Law's definition of public records when they are used by members of public bodies for the discussion of public business or public policy?

There are differing opinions among various states. For example, in Delaware, the Attorney General was recently asked to issue an opinion on this issue. A radio station had attempted to obtain emails between an elected official and county employees regarding county business. The emails were stored in a private email account and were not in a government computer server. The Attorney General's initial opinion was the emails were private and not subject to the state's open records law.

However, in mid-October, the Attorney General reversed its opinion and concluded that the denial of ac> cess was a violation of state law. It based its decision on a federal appellate opinion out of the District of Columbia requiring a federal agency to search for agency records that the agency director maintained in a private email account. The fact that the governmental official used a private email account was no different than if he had put paper copies of the correspondence "in a file at his daughter's house and then claim[ed] they are under her control," the court said. The AG's opinion concluded that emails don't lose their status as public records just because they reside in a private email account.

And it's not just AG opinions that have concluded this. Courts in California and Washington have held that emails residing in the private account of a governmental employee are public records if they are sent or received within the scope of that person's employment. And the State of Vermont has become the most recent to join the group that includes private digital records within the scope of a records request.

The Vermont Supreme Court concluded these digital documents are included, even if stored in public accounts, if they otherwise meet that state's definition of "public records." In analyzing that state's law, the court held that the definition of "public records" in Vermont didn't exclude otherwise qualifying records on the basis that they were located in private accounts.

How does that compare to Missouri's law? Missouri's definition of "public record" includes "any record, whether written or electronically stored, ... of any public governmental body ..." If the email was a record of the "body," then it clearly wouldn't matter where it was stored, based upon this definition. Similarly, records created by a private contractor under an agreement with a public body would be covered as a public record, no matter where they were stored.

But, the Missouri definition specifically excludes "internal memorandum or letter received or prepared by or on behalf of a member of a public governmental body consisting of advice, opinions and recommendations in connection with the deliberative decisionmaking process of said body, unless such records are retained by the public governmental body or presented at a public meeting." If these messages are held in a non-governmental email account, that might limit what would fall within a liberal interpretation of "public record" and therefore limit access to private emails not retained by the body.

There is, however, no doubt that the Missouri law was meant to have a liberal interpretation and that it was drafted with the intent to create a public policy of openness. Creation of a "functional" interpretation of this state law would seem to mandate that it is time for this definition of "public records" to be amended by the state legislature to ensure that public records cannot be hidden in private email accounts by public officials seeking to keep their activities out of the public's eyes.
